THE TEXT

1-In the spring 2009, 16-year-old Breon Johnson was on the verge of giving up on school. With a report card of Ds and Fs, success seemed out of reach. Breon struggles with Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD), causing him to have trouble focusing and staying on task. To add another challenge, Breon was faced with racism and discrimination from elementary school on – even from teachers.

2-Breon's mum Melissa was very involved in the school, doing her best to ensure her son got what he needed. "He had no confidence," Melissa told us. Tears welled up as she described what life looked like for her son. Fortunately, Melissa got a call from Breon's school counsellor, recommending she look into online public school. That was the beginning of a revolutionary chapter in Breon's life. With teachers' support, Breon Johnson went from a defeated teenager to an honour roll student in just one school year.

3-In his own words, teachers in his old school “don’t care whether or not kids get through high school.” These experiences were enough to kill his confidence in himself and in his ability to learn. Breon described his teachers at Insight Online School of Washington: they are invested in his success, they answer his questions promptly and they are available around the clock.

4-When asked what has been the biggest surprise with online learning, Melissa answered, “His grades. He’s on the honour roll. His confidence has shot up.” I asked him what his future would have been like were it not for public online learning. He didn’t miss a beat. “I probably would have been that guy on the side of the street asking for money.”

Friendship is a blessing and a friend is the channel through whom great emotional, spiritual and sometimes even physical blessings flow. Friends can cheer us when we’re or depressed. Friends can challenge uswe allow ourselves to get beyond our reasonable boundaries.

Friends can motivate us when we’re ready to give in and they canus when life falls apart.

They are there when all is and we want someone with whom to share life’s pleasant and moments. We often just want them to have a good time. In how many ways have friends enriched our lives and made us feel loved, accepted, respected and cared? Probably, too many to list and the list grows daily.
